A long time ago when animals and birds were people, many different kinds lived together in a large village. This was the time when the earth was first formed and there were no seasons.
The people in the village were undecided about the length of the seasons. They were especially concerned about the length of the winter season.
It was decided that the leaders would have a meeting and vote on the length of the cold months. The meeting was to be held in the largest tepee.